BedRock Announces: Automatic Monthly Updates & License Renewal

BedRock Software, Inc. (BedRock) announces the automation of AggFlow monthly program updates. This change takes place in conjunction with new program expiration features designed to support the annual licensing agreement for AggFlow users. Program users will be automatically notified of available updates and can download those updates simply by selecting the “updates available” button. In addition, program users will be automatically notified of pending license expirations as part of the annual license enforcement program.

“In the past users were required to voluntarily update their AggFlow license annually and also pay full fare for additional program modules. We did away with the add-on pricing structure and instituted a cheaper, simpler mechanism for our users. Now, AggFlow users with current licenses are entitled to every aspect of the program - free of additional charge. This includes any full program releases” said Robert Teller, Director of Distribution. “This is an important step for our entire global customer base”.

AggFlow, the industry standard plant optimization software program, is used by aggregate producers, equipment manufacturers and dealers around the world to reduce calculation time and increase productivity in aggregate and mining operations. BedRock Software, Inc. has been providing the AggFlow program to the aggregate industry since 1993. BedRock is an independent, privately held company.
